

In a quiet corner of Gdańsk, Intel's headquarters was known for its advanced technology, but no one expected it to house a secret portal to another dimension. One rainy afternoon, a curious intern named Krystianooo accidentally discovered the hidden door behind a bookshelf filled with old computer manuals. When he stepped through, he found himself in a world where computers ran on laughter instead of electricity, and robots danced to music made by flowers. When he returned, he brought back a single petal that glowed with the power to make any device work twice as fast, but no one believed his wild story.